

AI personalization prompt pack

FREE TEMPLATE

AI drafts; you personalize. Never send an email you haven't read.

1. Research the person

Here is a LinkedIn profile and a recent post from someone I want to email: [paste]. List (a) three specific, verifiable things about their career or work, (b) anything we have in common given that I'm a [year] at [school] from [hometown] studying [major], and (c) one thoughtful question I could ask them on a call. Do not invent anything that isn't in the text.

2. Draft the personalized first line

Using only these facts about [name]: [paste facts], write five different first lines for a cold email from a college freshman. Each under 25 words, specific, not flattering, and about them rather than me. Use the 'compliment + connection' idea: one genuine compliment and one real thing we share.

3. Tighten the email

Cut this email to under 120 words without losing the specific first line or the single ask for a short call. Keep it warm and plain; remove any phrase that sounds like a cover letter: [paste draft].

4. Subject lines

Write eight subject lines for this email, each under 8 words. Mix: school connection, their specific work, and a plain question. No clickbait, no exclamation points: [paste email].

5. Mail-merge personalization column

For each row in this table (name, firm, title, detail), write a one-sentence personalized opener that uses the detail column exactly and invents nothing. Output as a single column I can paste into my sheet: [paste rows].

6. Call prep

I have a 20-minute call with [name], [title] at [firm]. Here's their profile and what I know about the firm: [paste]. Give me: a two-line summary of what the firm does, three recent things worth asking about, five questions that show I did my homework, and one question about their personal path.

7. Thank-you draft

Draft a 4-sentence thank-you email after a call with [name]. The specific things they said that I want to mention: [notes]. The next step I promised: [step]. Keep it warm and specific; no generic 'thank you for your time and insights.'

AI guardrails

- ☐ AI drafts, humans personalize. The first line is always yours.
- ☐ Never send an email you haven't read, start to finish.
- ☐ Never let AI invent a fact about the person. If you can't verify it, cut it.
- ☐ Paste in real material (their profile, their post), not just their name.
- ☐ If the email sounds like a press release, rewrite it the way you'd text a cousin's friend. Politely.
